Who can observe?
Indiana University Health Ball Memorial Rehabilitation Services welcomes persons that are interested in observing who are: university students or graduates or other adults interested in careers in physical, occupational or speech therapy. In certain instances, high school students can be appropriate for the structured observation program.

What is the process to become an observer?
The registration process does involve a significant amount of time for both the observer, as well as the student coordinator. Therefore, we have a minimum requirement of 20 hours for all observation requests.

To begin the process, you must first contact the IU Health Ball Memorial Rehabilitation Services Student Coordinator to request an application. Applications are accepted three times a year for a limited number of opportunities. Decisions are made one week after the application deadline. Students accepted for observation will have two weeks to complete all necessary registration requirements.
